MARIJUANA LEGALIZATION ON THE HORIZON? IMPLICATIONS FOR THE PUBLIC BEHAVIORAL HEALTH TREATMENT SYSTEM IN CALIFORNIA

Patrick A. Zarate, Division Manager, Alcohol and Drug Programs, Ventura County Behavioral Health Department

As the debate about marijuana policy ramps up, and a defined theory of regulation from the State is still years away, learn how one large county in California has used what the science says about marijuana and its known harms to pro-actively shape a local coordinated response.

Peter Banys, MD, MSc, Clinical Professor of Psychiatry, University of California San Francisco

The West is going green. Colorado, Washington, and Oregon have legalized cannabis products; and, California will have one or more legalization initiatives on the ballot in November 2016. Polls suggest that legalization will prevail. Possession will remain illegal for those under age 21; however, youth in California already have virtually unlimited access, and it is adolescents who face unique vulnerabilities from regular or heavy use. Dr. Banys will discuss the issues likely to emerge after passage of a marijuana legalization initiative and how state and local agencies should prepare.

From detox to recovery over the past ten years or so, the co-occurrence of substance use and mental health conditions among people seeking treatment has emerged as a critical issue for those who plan, treat and fund mental health, substance use and behavioral health programs. Attention to co-occurring disorders (COD) has been enhanced by a growing body of research showing the high prevalence of COD and its implications for improved outcomes of treatment and other support services. This presentation presents an updated synthesis of the research information and offers specific recommendations for providing services for this population. This synthesis is best seen as complementing the considerable amount of work that has been published and participants are couraged to review the key resource material used in this presentation that will be provided.
